-modus_metodik.pdf [12]; [13]; [14]; Online digital television service Aereo has filed for a $500 million IPO that would take the service public for the first time. The company also said it has more than 7 million customers. Aereo, which lets people rent over-the-air channels through a service called "WatchTV," would start trading on the NASDAQ under the ticker symbol AERIO. The filing describes Aereo as a "scheduling, programming, and distribution platform" for over-the-air signals that is "the only one of its kind." The company launched in New York in April 2012. It says it has 7 million customers and now operates in 42 markets, including New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, and Boston. The service lets customers use a virtual antenna to access digital programming from a number of broadcast networks, including ABC, CBS, FOX, and NBC. "Aereo Inc. (NASDAQ: AERIO) is a provider of a new over-the-air (OTA) television service that delivers live television programming to subscribers over the Internet," the filing reads. "Aereo's technology allows viewers to use a remote control device to access OTA television signals." Aereo CEO and founder Chet Kanojia told TechCrunch that the service costs $8 a month. He also said that the filing should be taken with a grain of salt, as the company is operating in some legal gray areas. Aereo's service is basically a giant digital antenna that operates inside a user's home. Subscribers access broadcast networks via the web or their smartphones through a programming guide that Aereo provides. While the company has built a distribution business model, it has not created a large number of jobs yet. The company has made various moves to make sure that it's not facing trouble in court. It has won a series of legal battles and just last week a judge ruled that Aereo was violating broadcast copyright law. However, Kanojia said that Aereo has a way to appeal the decision, which could ultimately force the company to change its business model. 82157476af
